

This image shows a dense grid of approximately 30 different advertisements, typical of a classified section in a Korean newspaper. The ads are arranged in a grid format with varying widths and heights. Some are standard rectangular boxes, while others are more complex with multiple columns or images. Many of the ads feature bold, colorful headings and large amounts of smaller text. Several ads include contact numbers or web addresses at the bottom. One prominent ad on the left has a red header with white Korean characters and a phone number below it. Another on the right features a yellow background with several small images and text. The overall layout is chaotic and overwhelming, reflecting the nature of a classified page.